I have a couple of action methods on a service layer for various operations that I want to log: LoggingMethodA() LoggingMethodB() LoggingMethodC() Where each one of these executes (logs) a different set of properties. Is there a way I can get at them without manually setting up the LoggingDependency so that I can do the following: Logger.Log("LoggingMethodA"); Logger.Log("LoggingMethodB"); Logger.Log("LoggingMethodC"); I'm sure I'm forgetting something obvious, but this seems like the sort of thing that would be used often enough that it should have been supported. Am I going about this the wrong way? A: You could use the Common.Logging library: Suppose you have some classes like these: public class LoggingA : ILoggingA { private static readonly IDictionary ClsTypes = new Dictionary { { "A", typeof(LoggingA) },
