Commercial.rar>?>?>TEAM/UCLUSTERThe coupling of nucleotide excision repair to mutagenic DNA polymerase beta in Saccharomyces cerevisiae. In Saccharomyces cerevisiae, several mutant strains with defects in nucleotide excision repair show a reduction in the UV mutability of the adenine phosphoribosyltransferase gene, arg4-4. DNA sequencing of cloned segments of arg4-4 in these strains has revealed the presence of a polymorphism that alters a G at nt 557 in the wild-type sequence. This polymorphism and an adjacent one are absent in several repair-deficient strains. The genotypic revertants isolated from the repair-deficient strains in which this sequence has been restored to its wild-type configuration display a low level of nucleotide excision repair, as measured by the residual UV sensitivity of the arg4-4 gene. The levels of UV mutability in these strains are restored to the wild-type level by a high-level copy of the gene coding for DNA polymerase beta. The results suggest that the DNA polymerase beta may be involved in the repair of DNA damage in the vicinity of the gene.
