Initially available in English only, other language versions were quickly developed. Its combined issues include over 58 million articles, .The journal was founded in April 1939 when a group of professors from the University of Pittsburgh started a project to create a large and modern journal in mathematics. At this time, the university already had several journals in physics, but nothing in mathematics. Thus, the journal was first called "Math. Magazine", but later it was decided to use the word "Mathematics" for several reasons. First, it was the only one that covered all areas of mathematics.
