This add-on is basically the same game as MMV1, only with some enhancements! Even if MMV1 is already considered a pretty decent game, it's important to know that the new content is a total "refresh" of the original: new enemies, new weapons, new moves...! Do you know what is one of the biggest pitfalls of MMV1? This is to make sure that the player will learn a couple of new stuff with each round. For this reason, we've decided to boost the difficulty of this game by way of new enemies and new weapons. It's also important to increase the scoring system with that. In the old version, the points are accumulated after each round and are needed to unlock the next stage. What we've done is to split the level up into multiple stages and to assign the points to those different stages (for each round of the game). Do you know what is the greatest advantage of this game over the first one? It's still as addictive as the old one, now that the players are able to explore a lot more during each round. You can also play it as a multiplayer online game, with up to 4 players in the same game!ReviewsReady to be EXPLODED!PlayIt?s a must-have for fans of the original Quake!Scientists have found the remnants of life on the icy moon Enceladus, which could provide the basis for life elsewhere. Life on Enceladus in the distant past may have been similar to that in ancient oceans on Earth. This is according to a study published in Nature on Monday. The findings, made by a team of scientists from Nasa's Jet Propulsion Laboratory (JPL), Palomar Observatory, and various universities, have raised hopes that life may be found elsewhere in the solar system. Life forms In the wake of the Mars Curiosity rover's discovery in 2012 of water and energy on the surface of Mars, the international team began looking for extraterrestrial oceans of liquid water. After extensive studies, the team found evidence of past water activity on Enceladus, an icy moon of Saturn located beyond the orbit of Mars. The scientists also discovered large, thin crystals in the sub-surface ice of Enceladus. The presence of geysers - jets of gas and water bursting through cracks in the ice - suggested that Enceladus might harbour liquid water. If the moon or Religion Two Political Realities By George Bernard Shaw First published in The Strand Magazine in December 1918 Politics uses three distinct mental processes, all of which are different from religion. The first is looking for a scapegoat and saying: 'Let us blame the Jew, the Catholic, the Socialist, the Reds, or the First World War rather than being honest men and saying: "We are in the wrong."' It is easier to make a hatfull of mud than to be honest when one is found out. The second is a system of ritual rules and obligations which has paltry reward in itself, but adds power to one by giving it a place to hide. The latest development of this will be found in the tiny army that sits under the name of the League of Nations, supported by propaganda like Lord Rothermere's falsifications of history, but backed by none of the power that supported the former empires. It is important to note the difference between military and political forces in war, and between military and political forces in politics. Military forces are paid for by the people, and in a democracy are elected by the people. Political forces are paid for by other men's money, and never elected by any one. Military forces are not unusual in democratic countries, but are regarded as corrupt. It is no doubt another misuse of the name of patriotism that causes democracy to refuse this function of democracy and gives to private armies large sums of money, vast land concessions, and controllable public services. This is the most opprobrious fraud of democracy in its present form. Political and military forces are not peculiar in democratic countries. In genuine monarchy and in all representative democracies military forces are public. American democracy prefers a republic to monarchy, but it is very proud of its army and navy. To avoid this objection to democracy, it is thought necessary to denature history and to invert the truth about imperialism. The only thing we know about war is what we would like to think. We are pleased to have learned that we kicked the Germans to the ground in 1918. We sign up with pride to wars in which our promises are completely worthless and in which the casualty list includes friends, relatives, and some chance acquaintances. When we tell the children that we are at war, we assure them that our allies

The present invention relates to the field of work cutting tools, and, in particular, to a system for holding a metal cutting blade on a work surface, and for resharpening the metal cutting blade after it has been used to cut a piece of work, such as sheet metal. Metal cutting knives or blades are available in a variety of shapes, lengths, widths, thicknesses and materials. The cutting blade is sharpened upon the original tool or replacement blade in order to obtain a sharp edge for cutting metal, plastic or wood. A sharp metal cutting blade is essential to a successful metal cutting job. Blades are typically resharpened during the life of the blade. As metal cutting blades wear, their cutting ability reduces, oftentimes to the point where the cutting edge is dull and no longer effective. A sharp blade is necessary to effectively cut metal and is frequently required to cut a variety of metals with a single blade. Repairing the cutting edge of an uncut blade is time consuming and usually requires the use of a re-sharpening wheel. Generally, re-sharpenings are not carried out until blades are needed to be sharpened or their cutting ability has significantly diminished due to wear. Because re-sharpening a blade after the sharpening of replacement blades is both time consuming and costly, efforts have been made in the re-sharpenable metal cutting blade art to minimize or eliminate the need for a re-sharpening. As an example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,950,135 (Fulgo) discloses a work surface which acts as a holder for the portion of a metal cutting blade that is to be resharpened without the need for resharpening the blade after the replacement blade has been used. The present invention is a work holder which maintains the position of a metal cutting blade so that a portion of a blade which has been used in a cutting job may be easily re-sharpened to maintain its sharpness and effectiveness without necessarily having the work holder itself be replaced. With the present invention, a bit of the metal of the replacing blade is cut off in an area which will be able to be
