hours and tried almost everything. Can someone help? A: I have created a minimal working solution for you that only shows the print dialog. I do not have the PDF. The PDF is created programmatically. I have tested the PDF from your environment and it is creating a working PDF like yours. This means that your PDF is not corrupted.

A 52-year-old hypertensive woman had experienced an ischaemic stroke in the left hemisphere (Glasgow Coma Scale Score=12). The patient was admitted for detailed evaluation of the ischaemic injury. On admission she had sensory loss in both lower limbs and walked with a mild ataxic gait, suggesting a mild right hemiparesis (National Institutes of Health Stroke Scale Score=1). The right carotid and vertebral artery systems were occluded. Twelve months after the stroke she experienced electrocardiography changes, including the occurrence of J-waves in leads V4-V6, leading to the initial diagnosis of Brugada syndrome. Cardiac catheterization revealed a coronary-to-saphenous vein graft; coronary artery angiography showed no stenosis. This was followed by a Brugada-like ST-segment elevation and electrocardiogram changes. The same day a temporary pacemaker was implanted. She developed polymorphic ventricular tachycardia related to a previous myocardial infarct. Antagonism with amiodarone resulted in a major improvement of her symptoms. On admission, the 12-lead electrocardiogram showed an abnormal J-wave in the inferior leads, with aggravation of the ST-segment elevation and a new left bundle branch block, which are suggestive of a concomitant left ventricular damage. The J-wave electrocardiogram reflects the dysfunction of the membrane potential of the endocardial cells, usually resulting from ischa
