“It allows players to move more like their human counterparts,” said Jacob Mathew, a designer at EA Sports. “All of the player traits (passing, shooting, dribbling) are now connected to a single degree of freedom, so we can now evolve them through both technical and tactical gameplay. There's a lot of important gameplay implications that come from being able to track the player better in such a nuanced way, and we'll be speaking more about it at E3.” Many of the new gameplay features will likely be illustrated at E3 during a press conference EA Sports will host. A playable demo of the game will also be playable for fans at the show. In addition to the new features, the game will also feature improved animations and performances as well as a new “Pro Experience” mode for players who want to get as close to the real thing as they can. The 32-player My Team mode is also seeing an evolution. All 32 players can use a single tank in My Team while the AI can use 10 tanks (though not all 10 at once). Players can swap out their tanks at any time using a quick swap system that the team balances out. If a player is replaced after the team's first tank is swapped out, the substitutions will not happen. "The technology we have in this game allows us to create a player performance engine that has over 15 times the processing power of FIFA 14," said Jose Pimentel, director of game development at EA Sports. "This means we have a lot more control over the player performance, from environmental performance (weather and time of day) to player weaknesses and strengths." After announcing FIFA 21 in January, EA Sports has been on a streaming streak to demo new games leading up to E3. The next such stream will be next week on May 23 at 10 a.m. PT. of Multiple Access (FDMA) and/or Code Division Multiple Access (CDMA) communication systems.
