All eight teams in the Southeastern Conference picked up quality wins in week three of the 2018 college football season, but what happened elsewhere to give us the 1-2 punch of a 16-1 team like South Carolina and a 13-1 team like Clemson? Key to the 2018 season: simple. No one is tougher or more experienced than LSU. No matter who the Tigers face, be it North Carolina, Auburn, Oklahoma or anybody, this team has the tools to beat that team. This time last year, we saw LSU lose to Auburn 21-16. This year, we see it beat Auburn 44-16. This time, the Tigers were the higher ranked team, to be sure. But who's to say LSU can't win by even more? At worst, it's a two-score game. Alabama lost to Texas A&M 24-17. At best, maybe it's a 16-point win. We've already seen both Florida and Georgia lose to a fifth-ranked team. Alabama, however, was ranked two spots behind LSU. If Tennessee beat Florida, the gap between the two would be two spots — Alabama and LSU versus Florida. The Tide would play Clemson later in the day. For the Tigers to have beaten Auburn, we'd have to assume their defense could keep the Tigers — ranked third in the nation entering the game — from lighting up the scoreboard. Alabama has proven to be the most complete team in college football. It doesn't need your fearless leader Shane Beamer taking over the entire program. But somehow it seems Alabama, LSU and Clemson, being the top three teams, are always the ones on the forefront of rivalries. But Florida is no longer a cupcake. Not after getting beat by Georgia, not after losing to LSU, and not after being stuck with Tennessee in the SEC East. Florida not only lost to Georgia, but the Bulldogs were coming off a loss as well. To a team that hasn't had a moral victory in some time, Georgia fought for a win against Cincinnati and lost. After the Tigers beat Auburn, they were healthy after a bye week. They hadn't had
