bronner and his contemporaries did not appear to find the space race itself to be particularly interesting. this is because the real objects of interest were the material and human resources which were needed to develop rockets and get people to the moon. what we see as boring bureaucratic structure in the game is just supposed to be the usual practice of publicly funded bodies. bronner seemingly tried to turn the space race into a war game of competing nations, in the spirit of classic cold war simulations. there are a few moments where the atmosphere of the game changes and you are taken into a brief glimpse of the early cold war. but this is all as far as it goes. the bad news is that these moons are exceedingly boring to play on. i spent most of my time searching for interesting environments in the desert or on mountainside. that said, the game does offer you the opportunity to visit some of the highlights of the early decades of space exploration. standing on the sea of tranquility with a slow-motion skyhook in the distance was quite the moment. touring the lunar geology has never been so rewarding as it is in battlefield 2. i imagine that this is because it was actually designed with this particular purpose in mind. in the same way that a re-creation of the great wall of china or the pyramids are really important to understanding the story of ancient china or ancient egypt, travel through the landscapes of the moon is actually a key part of that story. the apollo missions were the defining event of an entire generation. upon reaching the moon, i was also treated to a montage of the whole mission from the point of view of the spacecraft and its astronaut crew. it is a very entertaining video, but also a little over the top.
